

- WAGE LEVELS TO FALL BY HALF
- PENSIONS TO BE WIPED OUT
- NHS AND WELFARE STATE TO GO
- BRITAIN TO BE THIRD WORLD NATION

THAT'S WHY...

FREE TRADE THREATENS YOU!

FREE TRADE with its catchy new name of economic globalisation is the greatest danger to the living standards of everyone in Britain. YET NO-ONE IS DOING ANYTHING ABOUT IT! Changes to International law mean that multinational companies are stronger now than at any time in history. Worse, the international nature of these companies, answerable only to themselves and to no nation state much less the people, has led them to become enormously powerful. Countries bid for the presence of key multinationals on their soil by promising 'tax-holidays' and government grants. At the same time, multinationals switch investment capital and already existing plant from the West into the low-wage economies of the far East. As a result of this 'relocation', thousands of jobs are also 'relocated'. British jobs are being exported to the third world, making for mass unemployment here at home.

Two academics at the Harvard business school, Fagan and Jenson, calculate that the US and Europe have 250 million workers who, with benefits, earn £52 per day. In the 'emerging markets', there are 1,200 million workers who earn £1.90 per day. These 1,200 million workers are now being integrated into the new deregulated global market. Fagan and Jenson calculate that income levels in the West will fall by half to crush the social contract in the developed countries and this does not include the other 2 billion people who are not even included in the emerging markets!

This country has continually been told by Tories that "We must compete." Quite how this is to be done while maintaining living standards and a high level of employment has never been explained. It never will be either, for it is an impossibility. It is not possible to produce in this country as cheaply as in China or India because of comparative wage costs. Only when wage costs have been equalised (assuming all other things are equal) could we “compete.” For that to happen, the welfare state, pensions and the NHS will all have to go and wage levels will need to fall by half. Alternatively, mass robotisation and computerisation on a scale seen only in Japan would enable us to “compete,” but at a cost of massively increased unemployment as workers are made redundant in all walks of life.

BRITAIN TO BECOME PAUPER NATION

Economically, this is the major issue we face. Yet it is not being addressed. Living standards have been under attack for nearly twenty years. Comparative wages have fallen behind our industrial competitors so much that South Korea (no longer the far eastern low wage economy of old) is actually looking to Britain to reduce its labour costs! So it was that last month, Tory chiefs hailed news that LG, a South Korean computer company was to build a plant in Wales and create 6,000 jobs. A vote of confidence in Britain the Tories said, Britain is the enterprise zone of Europe they said. What rot! The reason for the Koreans moving into Britain is that, unbelievably, wage rates here are lower than in their own country. As for Britain being Europe's enterprise zone, it is fairer to say that Britain is Europe's low-waged sweatshop.

In the face of government economic incompetence, the jobs are certainly welcome. But four things should not be forgotten: firstly, foreign investment in Britain is a mark, not of economic success, but of economic failure with its high unemployment and corresponding low wage rates; secondly, the foreign investment is not made for our benefit. It is made for exploitative profit. The said profit which will then drain away from Britain back to the investor country; thirdly, inward investment like South

Korea's LG will more than be made up for by other firms relocating to even cheaper countries like Bangladesh or Burma; and fourthly, why is it necessary for foreign firms to invest in the UK and qualify for financial assistance in doing so? Could not British finance supply the cash?

Economic globalization is going to lead to a world economy where world wage rates will gravitate towards the average. That may be fine for China, Indonesia and Lesotho but it is disastrous for us. Both Labour and Tories are committed to the free trade ideal. Free trade rules in Europe mean that we cannot protect ourselves from becoming a third rate country with third world standards. The British National Party believes that trading with countries which have labour rates a fraction of ours is not fair trade. The BNP believes the solution is to exclude the manufactured goods of other nations and in so doing preserve our way of life and our standard of living which is under threat as never before.

● Swiss Air has moved its entire data-processing operation to India where wage rates are a fraction of those in Switzerland. This move is likely to be followed by other employers all over Europe.

No.170 AUGUST 1996
Editor: John Morse

THROW OUT THE RÉGIME NOT JUST THE TORIES!

The Tories look a busted flush — weaker, wearier and more incompetent than ever as they blunder towards their electoral doom. With fate closing in fast, HMG has been desperately trying to look 'different' from the opposition. John Major has been going through the motions of 'fighting Europe' over British beef. Home Secretary Michael Howard has been talking 'tough' on law and order. Education secretary Gillian Shephard has been musing about restoring grammar schools. None of it will wash.

Most of these initiatives, all of which are in any case too little, too late, are running to nothing. John Major has flown the white flag to Brussels over the beef crisis; Michael Howard's criminal law reforms have been publicly opposed by judges; With a Labour government less than nine months away, few of Mrs. Shephard's grammar schools will see the light of day.

The truth is that Britain caved into the EU over beef because Tory leaders are 100 per cent pro-EU; Crime is on the loose because the Tories appointed 'politically correct' (P.C.) criminologists, police chiefs and judges; The welfare system, is headed for collapse because of economic failure through 'free market' policies; Our children are increasingly illiterate because of P.C. education 'experts' put in charge of our schools.

No amount of Tory posturing alter the facts. Britain after 17 years of Tory rule is a picture of poverty, demoralization and decay. It is only natural that millions of Britons should be getting ready to throw the Tories out. What isn't so natural is that so many of their votes will go to Labour. Blair will hardly dismantle the pro-minority P.C. dictatorship that has grown up under the Tories. Perhaps many suspect this but hope that they may at least get some economic relief from a Labour government. If so it is a forlorn hope.

Blair is as sold on international 'free market' economics as any Tory. The unemployment and insecurity that goes with the free market set-up will continue under new Labour. In a word the party names and the faces may change but in all essentials Lib, Lab and Con are one and the same. They are three faces of one régime. It is that régime that has to go if we want a better Britain and the only alternative to it is nationalism as represented by the BNP.

BRITAIN'S ECONOMY

Britain's economy is in a mess. No serious commentator on economic affairs will say anything else. Unemployment is high, investment low, the manufacturing sector weak. Import levels are too high and taxes are too high as is the public sector borrowing requirement. Britain does not have a healthy economy. But why should this be? Britain started this century after all in economic first place.

At the turn of the century, Britain had the biggest economy in the world, although both Germany and America were catching up, with France just a little way behind them. For eighty-five years, British military dominance had given the world peace in which to develop economically and British science and manufacturing had driven the technological pace. It is also important to note that this was totally British based. The Empire played no part other than the supply of raw materials which could have been had as cheaply anywhere else and which provided Britain's primary marketplace.

Today, Britain has slumped from 15th last year, to 19th most competitive nation in the world, the economy is not performing well and the result is that Britain is a poorer country. As Britain has got poorer, so there has been less money to pay for education, the National Health Service, adequate defence, and welfare benefits etc.

The Tories continually trumpet an expanding economy, lower unemployment and a return of the 'feel good' factor — much like Tory Chancellor Norman Lamont kept telling the nation about the mystical "green shoots" of recovery. But if the economy has been growing for four years, why is it that the National debt has doubled in just two years to over £380 billion? And if unemployment is falling, why are Tories so keen to axe welfare benefits which should by rights be falling anyway, but which are actually rising?

The problem for the Tories is manifold. In respect of their claims to have the fastest growing economy in Europe over the last four years, it is no doubt true. The snag is that this growth comes after the Tories have systematically through design and neglect decimated Britain's manufacturing sector. Starting off from such a low point growth is indeed possible but, much like the club of four men and a dog who recruit another two members and claim a 50 per cent increase, it doesn't mean very much. Secondly, government figure fiddling with unemployment statistics (thirty-two changes in counting the unemployed since 1979) means that the unemployed who have dropped off the figures (and either gone onto sick benefit or otherwise disappeared) do not help the government with its cash crisis since they are still claiming benefit one way or another.

Attempts to avert the inevitable by 'cutting waste', 'shifting resources to the sharp end' and 'spending money more productively', is simply the economic equivalent of fresh air and sticking plaster.

There are a whole range of other economic and financial problems that the government face. Most of which it cannot solve because it is wedded to the notion of the European Union and free trade. Quite simply, government in Britain has become the art of the management of decline.

It doesn't have to be like this though. The economic success of Japan was built upon a combination of keeping foreign imports out thus allowing it to build its economic base, encouraging high saving levels and directing all investment into its home economy. A stable society with traditional values and an aptitude for hard work and technical excellence ensured success.

This is something that can be achieved by almost any nation. Any reading of British history shows that this nation has all the necessary values and talent described above and more. In addition, Britain unlike Japan has vast resources of energy, in coal, gas and oil. There is no reason for British economic achievement not to be at least as great as that of Japan.

The British National Party is pledged to the gradual halting of the importation of foreign manufactured products and their replacement by goods made in Britain. The excuse of protection leading to a lack of choice, inefficiency and feather bedding simply won't wash. Japan has the strongest motor cycle industry in the world and competition is fierce: Honda, Suzuki, Kawasaki and Yamaha are world leaders not lame ducks. The other excuse that protection would invite retaliatory measures is laughable. Firstly, it hasn't done Japan any harm and secondly, Britain trades at a deficit with the rest of the world and so this country has nothing to lose and everything to gain. In parallel with the halt on foreign imports, the BNP would create a strategic economic council made up of government and industry to coordinate economic activity Japanese style. Existing industries would expand and new industries would be created to produce all of our needs — VCR's, camcorders, televisions, motor cycles, cameras, computer components. All the durables currently imported would be replaced with home produced products which would:— create jobs, raise tax revenues for the government, reduce the drag of welfare on the economy, eliminate the need for public sector borrowing and enable taxes to be reduced.

The British National Party has concrete proposals for creating a boom economy, for creating in parallel with it thousands of well-paid jobs, for increasing the material prosperity of everyone in the country. It means the elimination of unemployment. Labour, Liberal Democrats and the Tories have abandoned the idea of full employment, and with it abandoned the unemployed to poverty and those in work to supporting the increasing burden that creates. The British National Party will not abandon anyone. The BNP will be the only party standing at the next General Election with a manifesto commitment to full employment.

A successful economy can be created and wealth can be generated to pay for the things the country needs — but not by the old system and not by the old parties. It can be done — with economic nationalism, through the BNP.

Editorial statement

By now it will be known that last month's issue of British Nationalist was ordered by the party leadership to be withdrawn from circulation and stocks destroyed on the request of the editor. This was because of the inadvertent publication of a number of items which, taken together, might not only have given a false impression of how we wish the BNP and its cause to be promoted but also led to legal problems. We should explain that due to a combination of circumstances July's BN was produced without the usual degree of editorial supervision and control. Party officers and members will be aware of annex 1 to the BNP constitution, the party's code of conduct. We remind them of article 4 which specifies that all party members are expected at all times to conduct themselves in a manner that will bring credit upon the party, and to refrain from any acts which are likely to reflect discredit and/or dishonour upon it.

As part of the above, article 5 lays down that party members must behave with courtesy and restraint towards all other persons, including political opponents and members of racial minority groups.

Finally, article 6 forbids all members of the BNP to attack physically, or in any other way inflict physical harm on any other person except in legitimate and lawful self-defence. Any infringement of these provisions remains a punishable offence against party discipline.

Meanwhile BNP units will be granted credits to compensate for any losses incurred through the withdrawal of the last issue of our paper.

FROM THE HORSE'S MOUTH

Lyndon Hadden, chief executive at Rank Xerox in the US has launched a stinging attack on British businesses and has said that British businesses are too much orientated towards the short term. He said: "Our focus on short-term results, our lack of the belief in the strategic imperative of growth and our lack of resolve are the key causes of our decline. Rather than expand sales, managers prefer to take a restructuring provision to reduce costs. The stock market loves it. When you have restructured your company, take over another company and restructure that. Who cares if there is no real revenue growth — the share price has never been higher."

POWERHOUSE TO SWEATSHOP

THE WASTE OF UNEMPLOYMENT

As the country gets poorer, less cash is available to spend on essential services and on welfare. If Britain were a rich country, that wouldn't be too much of a problem as the money would be available to pay for it. But Britain is not rich enough to go on paying for vast numbers of people to sit at home on the dole or on income support/sick benefit. The looming crisis caused by a shortage of cash is provoking debate as to how to tackle the situation.

The Adam Smith institute says that the welfare state will collapse under the weight of its commitments early in the next century, which is not too far away. The pensions bill will be £1,566 billion, the NHS will cost £800 million and half the country lives in homes now, where someone is receiving benefit. Nearly 20 per cent of people live in homes where no-one has a job at all and this figure will rise to a quarter of people in the near future. Quite simply, these figures are unsustainable and something has got to give.

The reaction from Tories, particularly 'right-wingers', is to lash out at those who are on benefit as if it were they who were responsible for unemployment — the realistic figure of which is just under four million, twice the government's own estimate.

This attitude is fuelled by well-publicised tales of scroungers, benefit cheats and crazy stories like the one of an immigrant being awarded £100,000 in backdated benefits for the past 26 years. While abuses do undoubtedly occur, the idea of attacking people on benefit and ignoring the shortcomings of the economy with its structural economic weaknesses is patently absurd.

Another standard government response is to provide job training schemes for getting people back to work, joined recently by more education for people to acquire new skills and qualifications. Which is all very well — provided that there are jobs to go to! Experience suggests that there are not.

The latest idea to reduce welfare benefits is the idea of workfare. This idea, long mooted, will almost certainly be introduced — and probably by a Labour government who will face exactly the same problems as the Tories and have equally little room for manoeuvre. This may very well have the effect of reducing the number on benefit in the short term, but for those who have no option in the face of no work than to be on benefit, all this measure will accomplish is to ensure that these people will not have the time to find work and simply put off the evil day when the money runs out — whether benefit is being claimed as it is now, or whether it is claimed through workfare. If the jobs were there to go to and workfare was a device to shift lazy people back into work, that would be one thing, but as an end in itself it is going to be a disaster.

The reason for unemployment is a weak economy. It is not lack of training, it is not lack of education and it is not bone-idleness. It is a weak economy, plain and simple. There is only one cure for unemployment and that is to strengthen the economy and hence create jobs. Not token jobs through over-manning, but real jobs. Well paid jobs in new and revitalised industries — manufacturing industries. That can only come about through substantial economic growth and massive new investment. Neither the Tories nor Labour will be able to achieve such growth under the present system. The only way to achieve substantial growth and attain full employment is to replace imported consumer durables, currently running at 50 per cent of the total, with home manufactured products. The growth potential for British industry is something like 86 per cent. That kind of boom would bring an unprecedented increase in national wealth and prosperity. The BNP is committed to just such a programme.

● Asian families in Todmorden have an 84 per cent unemployment rate. Social workers say urgent action is needed to stop it reaching 100 per cent!

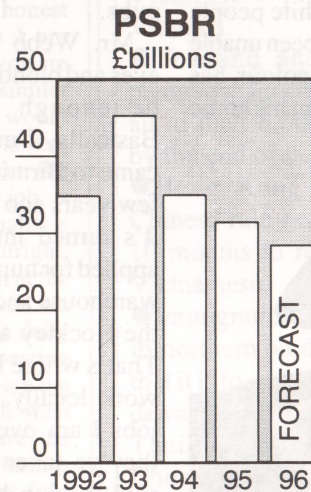

TORY TAX CUTS

The Tories have long believed in headline tax cutting as the short route to voter appeal. Even if, while giving money away with one hand, they were grabbing it back with the other through higher and extended VAT, airport taxes and duty on alcohol & cigarettes and the like.

With Tory fortunes so low, most Tory MPs are screaming for a tax cut in the November budget. Chancellor Clarke however has deliberately been lowering expectations on any tax cuts. Headlines like 'Clarke kills tax cut hopes' and details of structural failings in tax revenues precluding tax cuts set the tone. The reason for which is that Clarke (who has aspirations one day to be Prime Minister) wishes to appear prudent & wise and also of course, so that when he does announce tax cuts it comes as a surprise and he is hailed a hero.

Events this year though have conspired against him. The BSE fiasco is to cost the government almost £1 billion immediately with more over the longer term. So that's Less money for tax cuts (Lmftc). Additionally, last year, the UK gave Brussels an unexpectedly higher than usual net payment of £4 billion which has left a gap in funds for this year of £1 billion (Lmftc). Worse still, VAT tax revenue this year is down £6 billion (Lmftc). And corporation tax revenue is down £2½ billion (Lmftc). Together with other tax takes down £1½ billion (Lmftc), that makes a staggering £10 billion shortfall — part of which is due to last year's tax cuts!

The result of all this is that Clarke's borrowing estimate for the public sector, the Public Sector Borrowing Requirement (PSBR), of £22 billion is being drastically revised upwards to £28 billion (last year's borrowing estimate, also of £22 billion, turned out to be £32 billion). Plans for a balanced budget are always just at the end of the rainbow.

Government measures to raise funds to secure tax cuts caused a ruckus last month when the Minister of Defence revealed plans to sell off homes for the Armed Forces. The sell off is an absolute scandal and one motivated by the urgent government need to bring in funds to give away in the November budget. Señor Portillo, once the darling of the Tory right had to sooth right wing anger with the blandishment that only the cash from the sell off could avert a Tory disaster at the polls. All but one of the 'right-wingers' swallowed the move and only Cyril Townsend, MP for Bexleyheath, had the conviction to put country before party and vote against it in Parliament. The other 'right-wingers' are a cynical and self-seeking bunch to be sure.

Also weighing in has been outgoing Energy and Industry Minister, Tim Eggar. He appears to have done his bit before retiring from politics by selling off a chunk of strategic British business and flogging British Energy, raising £1.4 billion for the government's tax give away.

● Late last month, the government issued £3½ billion in treasury stock repayable in 2000 and 2015. Surely the government wouldn't be so cynical and irresponsible as to borrow money repayable in years to come just to finance tax cuts this year. Or would it?

MANUFACTURING IN RECESSION

The decline of Britain's manufacturing base continues with contraction in manufacturing for the second consecutive year running. Investment levels dropped 9 per cent in the last quarter of last year, sending signals of 'no confidence' in the British economy. At the same time, Britain for the first time in its history imported as many manufactured goods as we produced at home. Import levels rose to £14.6 billion in January and are sure to go higher as Chancellor Kenneth Clarke's irresponsible interest rate cuts are bound to suck in imports.

One of the chief problems of the British economy is that it is so lopsided. In round figures, Britain exports three-quarters of its manufactures and imports four-fifths of its own needs. Quite obviously, two things stand out. Firstly is that the four-fifths of domestic consumption currently supplied from abroad is ripe for increased home production filling the gap. Secondly, British manufacturing is so heavily dependent on foreign export markets that any downturn in those markets will have adverse consequences at home — which in fact is just what is happening as European economies flounder.

With the weakest order books for three years and the highest finished stock levels for five, British manufacturing is in a parlous state. Indeed, manufacturing is in recession with output down two years in succession with a real danger of heavy job losses pulling the whole economy into recession. Only a big increase in consumer spending can help Clarke although even that is more likely to simply suck in imports and further damage the economy. Nevertheless, that seems to be the plan as Clarke salami slices interest rates before waiting nervously to see if he has messed it up.

JOB LOSSES AND INSECURITY

This year, the number of plant closures has cost thousands of people their jobs and robbed whole families of their livelihoods. In the first five months of this year alone, 10,000 jobs have gone in manufacturing. But lost jobs extend beyond the traditional blue-collar work sector and into white-collar sectors once deemed 'safe'. The National Westminster Bank which has already axed 16,000 staff over the last five years is shutting 100 administrative centres and 350 branches. The number of staff involved has not been made known but must be at least 6,000. The merger of Sun Alliance and Royal Insurance is to see 5,000 jobs go and Barclays are to shed another 1,000 after having cut its workforce by 18,500 since 1990.

Also on the High Street, Liberty is shutting its chain of regional shops which means that 350 jobs will go; W.H. Smith is to get rid of 400 jobs, and less sadly the much disliked Benetton has seen several franchisees go into liquidation putting the whole of Benetton UK into question. Other job losses not included in the 10,000 figure have come from Shorts in Belfast — 1,000 jobs have gone there, while high-technology firm Racal has axed 180 jobs and another 700 jobs have gone at Express lifts following a merger. More recently, shoemakers Clarks have axed three factories and 2,000 jobs, while computer firm Escom has just closed 65 stores and scrapped 850 jobs.

Adding to the economic misery is a CBI survey which shows manufacturers shedding jobs faster than at any time for two years and manufacturing output at a three-year low. In recent years, more than 10 million people have experienced unemployment and a further 1½ million are in temporary jobs. It is not to be wondered at that people feel insecure because even those in work know that they could be made unemployed almost at any time.

Insecurity and the need to be more competitive is one of the chief reasons for Britons topping the European league of overwork. Millions of Britons are working longer and longer hours as staff cuts mean a bigger workload for those still at work together with a fear of being seen by bosses as a shirker — and the first to go in the next round of job cuts! Late working has become the norm for two-thirds of white-collar workers together with increased stress levels as people are literally working themselves to death. Tories say that job insecurity is a myth because of the jobs that are being created to replace those that disappear. What they neglect to say is that the highly paid, highly skilled jobs that are disappearing are being replaced by low paid, unskilled work, part time work and by short contract work, none of which are designed to breed confidence. New job average wages are just £50 per week, as against £200 for existing jobs. The outlook for the economy is bleak.

While job insecurity reigns at work, insecurity at home continues to haunt with 24,000 home repossession orders from the first three months of this year alone to standing at a 2½ year high. For thousands suffering from negative equity, the Tory dream has turned into a nightmare.

WHITE MAN NOT WANTED

David Webb from Hockley, Birmingham is the victim of racial discrimination against white people here in Britain. Webb has been unable to get a job because of his colour, has been constantly harassed in his home town with racial taunts, refused entry to nightclubs and turned away from pubs.

DAVID WEBB:
Faces anti-white discrimination

Mr. Webb said: "I've got blue eyes and blond hair and that seems to be enough for some people. Basically, I'm, at my wit's end. I came to Birmingham from Bristol a few years ago to start a new life but it's turned into a nightmare. I've applied for numerous jobs, including warehouse and shop work mostly in the Hockley and Handsworth area. That's where I live and I'd prefer to work locally. If anything, they're jobs I am over-qualified to do but they've taken one look at me and said the job has gone to someone else. But when I've looked a few days later, the vacancy is still being advertised in the paper or shop window. I think the reason they won't employ me is because I am white."

But David has suffered discrimination in other areas too. He said: "I've tried to get in pubs and clubs in Hockley and Handsworth and been turned away. On several occasions I was told it's because I'm white and would not be welcome."

David has now lodged a complaint with the notoriously anti-white Commission for Racial Equality and says that they have not treated his complaint seriously, although West Midlands police figures show whites were the victims of 12 per cent of racial crime in 1994 and it is estimated, 14-15 per cent last year.

CAREY'S CRUSADE

Dr. Carey the Archbishop of Canterbury recently made a well-publicised speech in the House of Lords arguing for a better defined moral code and its propagation in the schools. Dr. Carey also said that the nation is in danger of squandering its religious inheritance. It is a long time since an Archbishop sought to press for a firm moral code and it is greatly to be welcomed. However, it is the Church itself which in recent times has not only abandoned any form of moral code but has actually taken the lead in destroying it. If Archbishop Carey is to be successful, he has a lot of work to do to repair decades of Church-led moral decline.

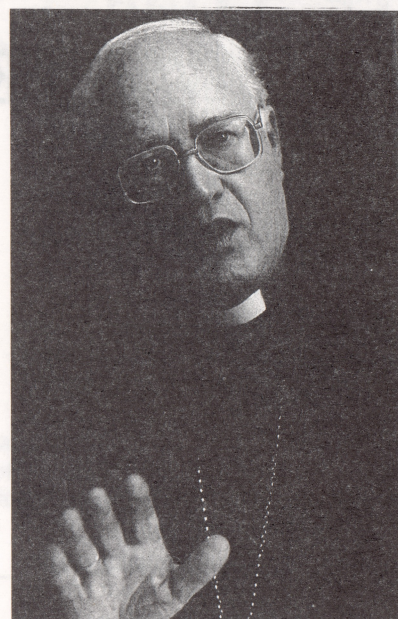

Echoing this view is Dame Jill Knight, a Conservative MP who also welcomed Dr. Carey's speech but said that when she launched a report on pornography and violence to the House of Commons and called for a tougher moral stand, she recalled that the Bishop of Avon rubbished her call and the Bishop of Coventry said there was "no earthly point in moralising."

The humanist tradition of moral relativism gives no firm landmarks and morals change as easily as fashions. "I'm ok, you're ok" has been the liberal humanist doctrine for decades. It meant that anything goes. But without firm moral guidance, how are children and adults who have grown up in the hothouse of this anti-moral culture to know what is right and wrong? The killing of little Jamie Bulger by two boys aged under ten shocked the nation. The remorseless rise in crime since the swinging sixties is unabated, as too is the rate of unmarried teenage pregnancies and abortions. And throughout it all, Church leaders have prevaricated on the old moral certainties. No one wishes to return to an age where harsh puritanism reigns, but the pendulum has swung much too far the other way.

The BNP very much agrees with Dr. Carey that there should be a lesson in moral duty. Dr. Carey can take the first step himself by enforcing Church codes on perversion. Why is it for instance that the Church is a Mecca for perverts? Why is it that the Church is home to so many child molesters? Why is it that allegations of child abuse are swept under the rug with suspect clerics being packed off to another parish instead of being investigated? And lastly why is it that so many clergy are homosexual when it is in direct conflict with the bible? Until Carey's recent call for morality, the church has shown more interest in the finer points of gay ordination!

Until the Church can rid itself of its own internal contradictions, it cannot carry any moral weight in telling the rest of nation how it should behave.
● Reverend Martin Poole of St.

ARCHBISHOP CAREY:
Still to settle the gay ordination row

Matthias Church, Colindale, north London testified last month to put a burglar, Errol Stewart, whom he picked up in a gay club behind bars. The jury at Wood Green Crown Court heard that the Reverend Poole was tied up, threatened with a knife and robbed.

The vicar touched Stewart's leg after they met at Brief Encounter near Trafalgar Square and invited him back to the vicarage. Denying allegations from the defence that he was homosexual, Poole claimed that he had invited Stewart back to the vicarage for a coffee to show him the architecture! Stewart was nevertheless able to describe the reverend's black Calvin Klein underpants in fine detail.

● It also emerged that Stewart preyed upon another vicar, too embarrassed to give evidence, after meeting him at a gay pub in Soho. After driving to the Reverend's Sussex vicarage for sex, the vicar was robbed as he drove Stewart back home.

TORY, LABOUR, LIBERAL SHAME!

Labour and Liberal-Democrat councillors fought it out on the floor of Bristol's council chamber in a scene which would have brought condemnation if perpetrated by others after a Saturday night's drinking. Labour's Bill Martin and Liberal-Democrat's John Kiely went for each other sending the spectacles of both men flying off before Martin sent Kiely sprawling in a heap on the floor. An off-duty police officer in the public gallery leapt into the chamber to separate the men.

The row stemmed from a motion by Kiely to reduce the number of Gypsy caravans parked at a site, but which was ruled out of order. Angry residents began shouting from the gallery and insults were hurled across the floor before Kiely and Martin squared up to each other. Councillor Kiely claimed to have been head butted and punched to the body several times. Councillor Martin later claimed that the blow that floored Kiely was unintentional!

Roy Thomason, Tory MP for Bromsgrove has been caught out in not declaring outside financial interest directly related to his position as an MP. Last year, Mr. Thomason had debts of £6 million and assets of £50,000. By any normal account, he should have been made bankrupt.

A secret deal however, brokered by the Chairman of the Royal Bank of Scotland and ex-Tory Minister, Lord Younger delayed legal proceedings for two years to avoid a damaging by-election for the Tories. Sir Gordon Downey, the Parliamentary Commissioner for Standards (the corruption-buster) said the MP

ROY THOMASON:
Rescued in shady deal which he concealed for financial advantage had received a "substantial" material advantage "not generally available to members of the public."

I can no longer vote Conservative. It is all very well for members of the present Cabinet to brag of low inflation and rising levels of employment, of exports flooding out and foreign investment flooding in, and to promise greener grass and ever lower taxes — these hardly seem to matter when the boasts and solemn pledges are made by men who have lied to stay in power, and who have dishonoured their offices with glib pretence.

Whenever I hear Mawhinney peddling sophistry or playing casuist, I murmur Matrix-Churchill and remember Gummer's pond; Pergau Dam and Supergun; Back to Basics; Family Values and their adulterous betrayal by David Mellor and Tim Yeo; and jolly weekends in the great hotels of Paris, all gratuit. I muse on Asil Nadir and the astonishingly swift reversal of the huge overdraft at Central Office into a Fighting Fund of Lottery roll-over proportions, ready for the next election.

I reflect on Ministers who act illegally, Hurd once almost by accident, poor soul, but Howard a

selection as candidate for Kensington and Chelsea seemed to the outsider conveniently contrived to be secured before his trial and heavy fine for a serious offence.

I call to mind the curious business of "cash for questions", and the bluster, prevarication and posturing that preceded the eventual disgrace of at least one member who had pocketed a fat envelope.

I ponder on a Conservative Government that muzzled free speech and moral protest with a Criminal Justice and Public Order Act, and that changed the law to do away with the public interest defence should another Clive Ponting ever think it morally imperative to spill the beans, and on Ministers who descend into tantrums if enquirers persist in digging for the truth they obfuscate. I brood on the corruption of Quangos and the Honours List, on the army of the great and good whose reward is ever-increased opportunity for sycophancy. And wonder why it is that a Minister who fails a Ministry, Mrs Bottomley, for example, is not despatched into the wilderness, but promptly honoured with another.

Should I add the fat cats of industry who once served in the House, learning its useful secrets? The fat cats of privatisation? The Conservative MPs who are Lloyds Names, and thus had to be saved from bankruptcy and their seats from by-elections with the broaching of some secret piggy-bank? The more I thumb my rosary, the more sins come to mind — Westminster Council, the seven-day advantage the Government gave itself for the Scott Report...

This has been a Government without conventional decency, with not a single unforced resignation offered, no matter how obvious the smirch on honour, how undignified the pantomime. If it lags in the polls and popular esteem, it is not that we put our faith in Blair and the Vicars of Bray who follow him. It is because John Major's Government has soiled the nation, and we need to wash our hands of it.

SIR — Just as patriotism is said to be "the last refuge of a scoundrel", anti-patriotism is becoming the first refuge of every Euro-fanatic who feels the argument turning against him...

We are told that we must stay in Europe to "fight Britain's corner". But who put us in such a corner and why are we always on our knees?

Sir Julian [Critchley MP] has the gall to ask whether Euro-sceptics have "no sense of history? Or of shame?" The answer is a double affirmative. We remember a time when we did not feel ashamed.

We remember national pride and self-respect — and we want it back.

Platform for BNP?

I WAS horrified to see the Rugby Advertiser giving a platform to the British National Party (BNP) in last week's letter page.

Although the BNP has no chance whatsoever of winning any seats and increase its membership during an election campaign by exploiting the free resources available. BNP recruitment would be greatly increased by an election campaign because of the publicity and propaganda opportunities.

Under British electoral law, if the BNP were to contest 50 seats in an election, it would be entitled to a free television broadcast and free delivery by post of each candidate's election address. This would result in the distribution over one million leaflets, which would obviously allow the BNP's Nazi propaganda to reach a far wider audience than is possible by its usual methods.

In the past few years the BNP has been unable to spread its race hatred and has not staged any major public events anywhere in the country.

We need to be fully aware of the BNP's intention for the general election, and not allow this organisation to use our local paper to spread their fascist policies.

Heidi Samuel, Rugby Militant Labour,
Address supplied.

Editor's Footnote: Crickey! You were horrified? Isn't that the pot calling the kettle black! I dare say there are people who are a little uncomfortable about me giving Militant letter's page space, but I am an upholder of free speech — everything in moderation,

Space for Nazis?

I WAS appalled to see the Rugby Advertiser giving space to the Nazi British National Party in last week's letter page. The BNP are a fascist organisation who try to ship up race hatred with their nationalist propaganda.

In a "BNP Britain" no minority would be allowed a voice, I would therefore urge the Rugby Advertiser not to give the British National Party a platform through their letters page.

Clive Dunkley, Rugby Militant Labour,

Editor's Footnote: I would not use a letter that incited race hatred. John Peacock's letter was an attack on Labour and the Tories — I don't have a problem with that. Censoring people will not make them go away.

BNP GENERAL ELECTION FEATURE

When the British National Party contests the next General Election the party will have distributed, courtesy of the Post Office, some two-million leaflets going into two-million homes.

For the BNP, this will be a massive recruitment exercise and also a mass exercise in fighting elections. Some time after the next General Election when the public finally sees through Labour (who BN believes will win), there will be enormous opportunities for the BNP. Having done our recruiting in this election and having trained branch organisers right across the country in the necessities of fighting elections, the party will be well placed to take advantage of any opportunity which presents itself.

This month, BN presents Keith Axon who will be contesting Perry Barr. In May of this year, Keith stood in the big Birmingham constituency ward which is part of the constituency in the Birmingham council elections and received 5 per cent of the vote. This was a good vote and just as importantly, the campaign raised the party's profile in the area which should give the general election campaign a bigger impact both in terms of votes and in terms of recruitment, which is the party's main aim at the next election. For two years previously, Keith has stood in Oscott ward, also within the Perry Barr constituency, where in 1994 he received 5.9 per cent and in 1995 he received 3.7 per cent of the vote. With recent campaigns in half of Perry Barr's four wards, Keith hopes to consolidate the work that has already been done and work on the 'virgin' territory still left, although some of that is adjacent to the notorious Handsworth area. Perry Barr is mostly white and working class and geographically could be called Birmingham north central. There is a multi-racial character to part of Perry Barr and non-whites are mainly confined to this one area rather than dispersed over the entire constituency. All in all, Perry Barr is a good prospect for the BNP.

KEITH AXON:
Will contest Perry Barr

YORKSHIRE SET GENERAL ELECTION STRATEGY

Yorkshire BNP leaders met in Leeds to plan their strategy for the General Election, and have now kicked-off a series of leafletting/canvassing activities in Leeds, Dewsbury and Batley. A Regional Activities Team has been setup to co-ordinate all activities and campaigns in Yorks., and this team will be carrying out a series of public events to put the BNP firmly on the map in the Region.

Senior Yorkshire activists also met with the party's North West Regional Organiser to plan support activities in the Pennine areas where the two regions meet.

As a result of the above meeting, Dewsbury, Bradford, and Leeds & Bradford Branch, will each be standing two candidates in fully supported campaigns.

Fund-raising activities are already under way and at least two of the Deposits have been pledged by local

Yorkshire Organiser's meeting set goals

GENERAL ELECTION FUND

TARGET: £10,000; TOTAL RAISED: £1,600

The party urgently needs to raise £10,000 in a very short time to meet contingency bills for the running of the party's General Election campaign from the centre. This fund is entirely separate from locally organised election funds, whose purpose will be to raise money to finance local candidates. This central fund is intended to build up an adequate financial reserve to ensure that the party has an efficient headquarters organisation and is able to meet numerous expenses which will be involved in the central running of its election machine.

Included in the expenses will be the production of the BNP party political broadcast in which a professional camera will be hired (daily hire rates are from £350 plus per day!) to shoot footage to give it more impact and so increase the rate of recruitment and votes generated out of the broadcast; the printing costs of the party's election manifesto; the hire of a whole bank of telephones and the hire of mobile telephones; travel expenses incurred by personnel touring the country and in the transport of election literature to various constituencies; special publicity projects and not least, paying the printer a considerable sum in advance for the printing of the party's election addresses (Two million leaflets don't come cheap!). It

BNP BOOKSHOP CLOSED

The BNP bookshop which was first opened in 1989 has now been permanently closed. The basic reason for which is cost based. Since the party can no longer stock party publications at the premises on account of a ruling made by the Department of the Environment, passing trade has diminished dramatically. The revenue lost makes it financially ridiculous to man the shop — necessary so as to maintain tight security arrangements — when passing trade is almost nil and when the party cannot even get the benefit of any headquarters function because of the same ruling by the DoE. The party bookshop is not a cost-effective business and has therefore been closed as from last month.

The vast majority of business is done by mail order and this will continue. Mr. Edmonds, the bookshop proprietor, will continue to live at the shop and the bookshop telephone number now reverts to his private number. Telephone enquiries for books and BNP material should be made to the number at the foot of page one.

The June emergency appeal for roller shutters to the shop has not been a waste however for two reasons. Firstly, Richard — a high ranking party official will continue to live at the shop and he needs the protection afforded by the shutters (the party was forced to remove protective boarding from the shop). Secondly, the swift purchase of shutters was also required to give Richard a better legal defence in yet another court battle with Bexley Council. The council delayed for months before giving the shutters their permission, then when they hadn't been fitted after a week, they launched another court action which is plainly vindictive, vicious and harassing. Only time will tell the outcome to this one.

The decision to close the bookshop although sad, is a financially necessary one, but it is the aim of the party to acquire different premises, having taken care of all planning regulations thoroughly in advance, at some stage after the next General Election.

Yorkshire BNP is determined to provide the necessary leadership to help the beleaguered White folk of the area reclaim their homeland.

is for this purpose the party is targetting to raise £10,000.

Last month, the first month of the appeal, raised £1,600. BN wishes to thank all those who put their hands in their pockets, in particular one donor from west London. As last month's figure was also the first month, that makes the total raised so far also £1,600. This figure would, no doubt have been a lot higher but for the fact that there was a very generous response to the party's emergency appeal for roller shutters for the shop.

All donations should be marked 'General Election Fund' and sent to: PO. Box 117, Welling, Kent DA16 3DW

BNP MAN HOLDS SUMMER CAMP

A small weekend camp was held on the Summer Solstice and organised by party stalwart, John Peacock as an enjoyable change to the regular campaign work of leafleting, paper sales and canvassing. The camp was also attended by Flemish nationalists and which included a meeting chaired by John Peacock and addressed by veteran speaker, John Wood of Sheffield and Jimmy Bosmans of the Vlaams Duits Kultur Verbond.

Held amidst the glorious countryside of Derbyshire's Peak district, all those who came from the cities found it especially refreshing in the open air, surrounded by only by other nationalists. The Saturday evening was spent at a local public house, where the visitors were made very welcome by both landlord and villagers. Back at the campsite there was a late night barbeque, with much traditional feasting and drinking!

What we stand for

- The establishment of a government of national unity that will put an end to nationally divisive party warfare; the return of leadership and statesmanship to British affairs.
- An end to immigration and a start to repatriation.
- British withdrawal from the European Community: trade with Europe where it suits us but no political ties.
- The disbanding of the multi-racial Commonwealth and its replacement by a new Commonwealth of self-governing white states.
- British ownership and control of British industry and resources.
- Protection of British industry by the selective exclusion of foreign manufactured goods from the British market.
- An end to the financial swindle that causes inflation and slump, and its replacement by a sane and fair financial system that will give the people the purchasing power to buy the goods they produce.
- The subordination of the power of the City to the power of Government, and the harnessing of the City to the needs of British industry.
- The regeneration of British farming, with the object of achieving the maximum self-sufficiency in food; also the restoration of the fishing industry by protection of our traditional fishing grounds.
- A healthy environment for a healthy people -- the protection of our countryside and an end to the architectural disfigurement of our towns and cities.
- Tougher treatment of criminals, including the return of the death penalty.
- A return to traditional methods of education, with stronger discipline in the classroom and the sacking of 'trendy' teachers.
- An alternative defence strategy: withdrawal from NATO; closure of all foreign military and air bases in Britain; British withdrawal from the war in former Yugoslavia, where no British interest is at stake; the bringing home of British forces from Germany; the strengthening of Britain's defences and a position of armed neutrality.
- An end to overseas aid and the allocation of the money saved to the financing of repatriation and greater help for the needy at home.
- The crushing of the IRA, the termination of the Anglo-Irish agreement and firm support for the loyalist majority in Northern Ireland.
- A return to healthy moral values aimed at strengthening the family and community.
